HYDRANGEA ARBORESCENS GRANDIFLORA

or American Everblooming Hydrangea.

After five years' experience with this shrub, having grown it by tens of thousands in open field, we confidently pronounce it the most beautiful hardy flowering shrub introduced within fifty years. Plants begin to bloom in early June, and produce fresh flowers continually until September, and in case of young plants, have blooms in all stages of growth when killed by frost in October.

The form of the panicle is much like Hydrangea Hortensia, of the largest size and of purest, dazzling white.

We have a large stock of strong, 2-year, nursery-grown plants.

HYDRANGEA, TEAS' SNOWBALL

(H. Cinerea Sterilis)

This is a newly discovered form, of a distinct species, and is a desirable companion for H. Arborescens Grandiflora. The panicles are of the largest size, rather flat, and of the purest white. The name was suggested by Prof. Alfred Rehder, of the Arnold Arboretum, and highly recommended by him as well as by Prof. Joseph Meehan, Germantown, Philadelphia, and others who have seen the plants in bloom.

"There are few, if any, perfectly hardy shrubs of so much value for outdoor ornamentation as Berberis Thunbergii. When planted so as to form a hedge it remains all summer neat, compact and yet luxuriant. Later, when the rigors of winter strip almost everything else of its beauty, Berberis Thunbergii seems only to shed its leaves in order to give full display to the many clusters of beautiful red berries with which it is adorned. This plant not only looks well in hedge form, but in groups it is exceedingly effective."

No other hardy flowers have so many shades of rich, delicate colors as these, and few are so hardy, flourishing in almost any soil or condition. They do best planted in the fall, but will succeed if set early in the spring. We went over our stock carefully during the blooming season, and recommend our varieties as true to name.

The cut represents a hedge of this desirable ornamental shrub four years planted. The photo was taken in June, when the plant was in full bloom. We consider this one of the very best hardy plants for an ornamental hedge, or for artistic groupings. It bears clipping into compact form, as well as any shrub. Plants 1½ to 2½ feet, 50 cents per 12; $3.00 per 100.
